2010 Annual Report

Navigating Life

"Life is all about choices. On every journey you take, you face choices. At every fork in the road, you make a choice. And it is those decisions that shape our lives."

— Mike DeWine

All of us have times in our lives when we face decisions that can make a huge difference in our future. Some choices are simple; some are agonizing.

When it comes to health, it is important that we periodically examine the choices we make. They literally can spell the difference between life and death.

With its mission of "improving the health of our community," the Health District doesn't make choices lightly.

Our board of directors has set a standard that we periodically evaluate our priorities and services and make changes for greater impact when needed. Every three years, the Health District takes a comprehensive look at factors that influence the health of our community. We gather input through our Community Health Survey and accompanying discussion groups, as well as consider statistics, trends and projections at the local, state and national levels.

In some cases, our decision is to stay the course. Tobacco use steals a great deal of health, so one of our priorities since 1995 has been to assist in smoking cessation. We are thrilled to see that adult cigarette smoking rates have decreased ever since, from 18 percent in 1995 to 11 percent in 2010.

Sometimes change is evolutionary, as when gaps in local mental-health services motivated us to partner with the Larimer Center for Mental Health and establish the Connections program to work on community-wide service changes. Other times it is rapidly thrust upon us, as it was last year when we quickly joined with the state and county health departments and Colorado State University in providing thousands of immunizations against a deadly and contagious strain of meningococcal disease that threatened our community.

We all tend to take our health for granted, forgetting the undesirable alternative. Yet conscious decisions about health can make huge differences.

I challenge you to do as the Health District does — to pause occasionally and ponder the value of your health, remembering just how much our decisions shape our lives. Then see if there is anything you could do differently to hold on to the precious health that you have.

Affordable Health Insurance for Families

Stacy Alms, a Fort Collins mom, would prefer to work and pay the bills herself. But paying healthcare bills for herself and her family can be challenging.

“Being self-employed, my husband and I don’t have access to group health insurance,” Alms says.

When the couple’s two youngest children both needed tonsillectomies and ear tubes at the same time, they were relieved to learn that the Health District’s Child Health Plan Plus (CHP+) and Medicaid Outreach Project could help.

Even with two incomes, the Alms family qualified for CHP+, an affordable health insurance plan for Colorado children and pregnant women. They paid a $35 annual enrollment fee and a nominal copay that enabled their children to receive the care they needed without plunging the family into long-term debt.

11% of local children in lower income households are uninsured

Duran helps clients complete the necessary application, and then follows it through until it gets processed. Applicants who do not qualify for Medicaid will automatically be considered for CHP+. A family of four can earn up to $55,800 a year and still qualify for CHP+. Children and pregnant women covered by Family Medicaid have no copays, while those covered by CHP+ have a copay up to $10.

CHP+ and Medicaid are state- and federally funded insurance programs that make quality healthcare affordable for children and pregnant women who are uninsured or underinsured.

Rosie Duran, coordinator of the Health District’s CHP+ and Medicaid Outreach Project, makes applying for help easy.

“To get started, it’s best if people call me,” says Duran. “We can usually get them in that same day, or we’ll do a home visit or go to their office, if they can’t get off work.”

Services covered by both plans include checkups and shots, dental care, prescriptions, hospitalization, mental-health services, eyeglasses and more.

“The CHP+ coverage we receive is strictly for our children,” says Alms. “It alleviates that extra stress and frees you up to take care of your own medical needs.”

The CHP+ and Medicaid Outreach Project is part of the Health District’s clinical services, which include the Connections mental-health program, Prescription Assistance, Integrated Care and the Family Dental Clinic.

Helping kids is at the heart of Rosie Duran’s work.

Teaching Skills to Improve Mental Health

When local counselors indicated a need for a different kind of mental-health therapy group in the community, Laura Burlingame-Lee stepped up to the plate.

Burlingame-Lee, who has a Ph.D. in counseling psychology, offered to start a DBT Skills Training group to help keep people with borderline personality disorder out of the hospital and teach them skills to lead more productive lives.

DBT Skills Training is a program of Connections, a partnership of the Health District and Larimer Center for Mental Health that provides services to deal with a broad spectrum of mental-health issues in the community.

Burlingame-Lee co-facilitates the DBT Skills Training group with Susan Jacobs, a mental-health specialist at Connections. The group started in summer 2010.

“It’s very much a team-oriented therapy,” says Burlingame-Lee. Each member of the DBT group receives weekly one-on-one counseling with a therapist while also participating in weekly skills group meetings.

DBT, or dialectical behavior therapy, is a comprehensive cognitive-behavioral treatment for individuals who have learned maladaptive and often inadequate emotion regulation strategies.

The treatment model comprises four major modules: mindfulness, distress tolerance, emotion regulation and interpersonal effectiveness. DBT’s mindfulness component borrows from Buddhist meditative practice, Burlingame-Lee explains, and involves “an increased and more sensitive awareness of what’s going on both inside and outside of you,” she says.

Burlingame-Lee’s interest in DBT was sparked while she was in graduate school and working with patients who were suicidal. Using DBT, she’s seen dramatic improvements in her patients’ ability to regulate emotions.

“I do see a lot of positive results, people moving in the right direction,” Burlingame-Lee says. “One young woman came to the support group with severe anger issues,” she says. By using DBT skills, “she went from having two or three outbreaks a month to just one every six months or so.”

In addition to Connections, the Health District’s mental-health programs include the Mental Health and Substance Abuse Partnership and the Community Dual Disorders Team. These services are designed to help local residents find effective, affordable services to improve their mental health and well-being while also reducing the burden on hospital emergency rooms and crisis intervention programs.

Prescription for Well-being

When Barbara Heller of Fort Collins stepped into the Health District's Prescription Assistance office, she got more than she bargained for.

On her first visit in 2008, Heller not only found the assistance she needed to obtain medications for her health issues, but she also received a big dose of positive thinking.

"Everyone in Prescription Assistance is very kind and helpful," Heller says. "You always feel welcome."

The Prescription Assistance program is open to residents of Fort Collins and northern Larimer County who meet household financial guidelines and who don't have insurance for prescriptions. People who live in the rest of Larimer County may use the program if they have a physician with Poudre Valley Health System.

13% of local residents report being unable to fill a prescription because of cost

The program has helped Heller obtain the medications she needs for health issues that include high blood pressure, migraine headaches and diabetes.

"My experience with Prescription Assistance has been extremely valuable," Heller says. "The staff make it easy to fill out all the paperwork and access manufacturers' assistance programs."

Heller's situation is fairly typical of the clients who use Prescription Assistance — people dealing with chronic health problems that require one or more medications that are simply too expensive to afford on their income.

"It's like detective work," says Ann Martin, the program's lead prescription advocate. "It doesn't matter what kind of medication a client needs or how many medications they need, we go on a mission to discover exactly how we can best help them," she says.

"We've learned how to navigate the pharmaceutical system and are able to help people in a way that makes a big impact," Martin adds.

Martin has been able to provide Heller with vouchers for local pharmacies and support from a manufacturer's assistance program. Heller also receives diabetes monitoring supplies through a Health District program supported by funding from the Fort Collins Lions Club.

"I would be in dire straits without Prescription Assistance," Heller says. "I wouldn't be able to buy my prescriptions at all."

Ann Martin knows how to navigate the pharmaceutical system to find the best benefits.

Step Free, Breathe Easy

Fort Collins resident Peg Stewart had tried acupuncture, hypnosis, will-power and prescription drugs to try and quit her 25-year, pack-a-day smoking habit. But only the Health District's "Step Free From Tobacco" program helped her succeed and get rid of a cough that had been annoying her for years.

Norma Pomerleau and Bear Gebhardt are the Health District's stop-smoking coaches who teach the six-session Step Free class and provide counseling sessions for individuals, couples and groups. Both are former smokers who understand the "smoker identity." With this background, they can coach clients through potential problems they may encounter in their first days, weeks and months of quitting.

The Step Free From Tobacco program is part of Health Promotion Services, which uses proven techniques to help Health District residents improve their health through heart-health screenings, stop-smoking counseling, nutrition and weight management counseling, and flu immunization services.

Pomerleau and Gebhardt employ an entertaining, straightforward, supportive approach to help people kick the habit. They also help clients understand that tobacco use is a biological addiction compounded by deeply engrained associations between smoking and countless daily activities and social situations.

"We provide our clients with a smorgasbord of proven tools and strategies they can use to help them stop smoking and stay quit," explains

Pomerleau. "They can pick and choose the ones that work the best for them in any given situation." Examples include deep breathing exercises, relaxation, visualization, affirmations and many more.

Free nicotine patches, gum and lozenges are available to help clients manage their nicotine withdrawal.

Stewart found a simple waiting tool to be most powerful for her. "When I really wanted a cigarette, I would wait 60 seconds, and then the urge would pass," she says.

Early in the class, clients create a list of "I will" statements to visualize and describe how their lives will be better once they quit using tobacco, such as being able to breathe better and having more energy.

The benefits of being tobacco-free prove to be their own reward, notes Stewart. "I stopped coughing about two weeks after I quit."

Stewart says she is now "a clean-air breather." She wants others to know that they can be free from nicotine, too.

"I've told every smoker I know about this program and the fact that it works," she says. "If you want to quit, and you go into each class with the intention of quitting, the instructors will give you the tools to be successful."

11% of Health District residents reported smoking cigarettes in 2010, compared to 18% in 1995
